

ABSTRACT

The invention provides a method and system for synchronizing a transmitter and a receiver wherein the transmitter generates phase difference information indicating a phase difference between an internal and an external clock, the phase difference information is transmitted to the receiver, and the receiver generates a clock signal dependent on the transmitted phase difference information.